

10 Wedding Insider Secrets

Save Time, Money & Stress

WARNING: This eBook is for your personal use only.
You may NOT Give Away, Share Or Resell This Intellectual Property In Any Way

All Rights Reserved

Copyright © 2019 – All rights are reserved. You may not distribute this report in any way. You may not sell it, or reprint any part of it without written consent from the author, except for the inclusion of brief quotations in a review.

10 Wedding Insider Secrets That Save Time, Money and Stress

Planning a wedding can be stressful for everyone involved. Sure, there are plenty of books, pamphlets and guides available that claim to be helpful, but sometimes they are just not realistic.

It takes a wedding professional, someone who has worked with hundreds or even thousands of couples, to really identify the common pitfalls that can occur on your wedding day. These mistakes can lead to stressful situations, awkward moments and hurt feelings.

Here are ten insider secrets that only someone who creates wedding magic for a living can share. Following them will ensure that your wedding day is full of love, happiness and good cheer.

1. Check local calendars for conventions, parades and other events that may interfere with traffic and hotel arrangements before setting an official date for your wedding.

There is nothing worse than planning your wedding and then finding out that your loved ones cannot get hotel rooms because everything is booked up due to a local event or college graduation. Even worse, you might discover that your guests' hotel rooms are sandwiched in between attendees of the National Association of Accordion Players.

Rather than subject your guests to several sleepless nights filled with polka music, investigate local events on your wedding day well in advance. Call local hotels to see if availability is limited due to an event or conference. If so, choose another weekend for your festivities.

You should also check local tourism calendars for charity walks, marathons, parades, or other big events that could affect traffic and hotel room availability. This way you will not be caught unaware.

It won't be much fun if you're forced to have your guests bunk with you because there is quite literally no room at the inn, or when you have guests arriving late for your ceremony due to traffic snarls and road rerouting.

2. Use your creativity (and favorite music) to turn saving money for the wedding into an enjoyable game instead of a chore.

If you are paying for your wedding yourselves, then you know how important it is to save money. The best way to do this, besides setting a budget and sticking to it, is to make a game out of saving.

Here's one creative idea:

Set up a jar and label it, “Wedding Fund.” Make a list of your favorite artists and narrow it down to the three or four that you hear the most. Set monetary amount for each of them.

Now every time you hear a Dua Lipa song, you must put $2 into the jar. If Justin Bieber is played, then $5 goes into the jar.

If you’re not a music lover, you can play the same game with television commercials instead.

Give yourselves a time period for the game to run. Six months is a reasonable length of time. See how much money you can save this way before time runs out. You might be surprised!

By turning money saving into a game, you’ll have more incentive to stash away cash for your big day. If you want to take it a step further, set up two jars and compete against each other to see who can save the most.

3. Choose an imperfect, mismatched Alice in Wonderland-esque theme for your wedding.

Too often couples focus on trying to make everything at the wedding “perfect.” Instead, you can deliberately include eclectic choices, resulting in a wedding that is unique, memorable and less stressful.

Here’s how it works:

Take the story of Alice and Wonderland and loosely adapt it to your wedding reception. Have everything be just a little “off.” This means that nothing should be perfect.

Your reception hall can be decked out with mismatched tables, china, flowers and silverware. Scatter several mini desserts on the table around a traditional wedding cake.

Automatically, a huge weight lifted off your shoulders. You no longer have to worry about throwing the “perfect” wedding. When the guests arrive, they are greeted by an atmosphere of whimsy and comfort.

If Alice in Wonderland isn’t your thing, there are a number of similar themes you might choose. Host a shabby chic wedding or a down home country wedding (throw in a few rough-hewn wooden tables for this one) or a relaxed theme.

The theme you choose doesn’t really matter. What does matter is the fact that you won’t have to stress over choosing the perfect china to eat off of.

4. Book your honeymoon travel in your maiden name rather than your married name.

I know you’re anxious to show off your brand new Mrs. However, this might mean you end up with no honeymoon at all!

It can take several weeks to get a new passport and social security card in your married name. When arranging flights and international travel plans for your honeymoon, be sure to reserve everything in your maiden name.

Another thing to keep in mind is your name change itself. In some states there is a required waiting period between applying for and receiving your marriage license. This can delay the date on which you are able to be legally married. This can vary depending on where you live, so be sure to look up local statutes and get your license well in advance.

5. Keep track of your guests by numbering your guest list and coordinating your RSVP response cards with those numbers.

When it comes to invitations and reply cards, you can keep better track of them by numbering the reply cards to correspond with your guest list. For example, if Great Aunt Elsie and Uncle Gene are the fifth people on your list, write a small number five discreetly on the back of their reply card or in the corner by the stamp.

This tip is helpful in case you receive an RSVP that lacks a name, meal choice or number of guests attending. (Believe me, this will happen to you.) It's also quite useful for those guests with illegible handwriting.

This way you won't need to call every one of your guests to retrieve the missing information. You can save time and aggravation by going straight to the number on your list.

As a bonus, you can reward the guests who responded the fastest. One couple, who both happened to be accountants, gave the centerpiece at each table to the person who was the first to RSVP.

It was the perfect way to reward their prompt guests and showcase the couple's slightly obsessive compulsive personalities. In fact, if you set up this contest when you send out your invitations, you will receive your responses much faster.

6. Assign someone the important task of wrangling out of town guests on your wedding weekend.

It's your wedding day. You have better things to worry about besides figuring out how to get your lost Uncle Bernie to the ceremony on time. Yet if you don't plan ahead, everyone will be calling you with their numerous questions and problems.

Solve this by designating a contact person. Make sure this person isn't a member of the wedding party because they have enough to do on your wedding day. Besides, the last thing you need is for your pictures to be delayed because your Best Man is too busy giving directions to your second cousin twice removed!

Instead, designate one person, a parent or responsible family member, as the contact person who will help guests on your wedding day. Put that person's cell phone number on your wedding invitations.

Ideally, this person should know your local area backwards and forwards, or just be really good with their smart phone GPS and map apps. He or she can be your point man for all questions, giving you one less thing to worry about.

7. Honor the special women in your life by inviting them to create an impromptu bouquet for your ceremony.

If you have close friends or relatives who are not in the bridal party, this is a meaningful way to include them in your ceremony.

Ask 10-12 women (close friends, mentors, sisters, aunts or grandmothers) to bring a flower or two of their choice to your wedding ceremony. Once they arrive, designate a close friend to gather all of the flowers and bind them with florist wire and ribbon.

Just before you walk down the aisle, pick up your newly completed bouquet. You can then have your minister or officiant explain the significance behind the mismatched bouquet, or you can explain it later at your reception.

Not only does this add meaning to your wedding bouquet, it pays homage to the women who have touched your life in a significant way and saves you the hundreds of dollars that you would have spent buying a bouquet from a florist.

8. Make a list of all of the contact information for each member of your wedding team and distribute several copies to friends and family in case you need to get a hold of one of them on your wedding day.

Murphy's Law states that whatever can go wrong will, and unfortunately, sometimes this applies to the day that you get married. Your cake might be late, the church doors might be locked or the limos might not arrive on time. Any number of emergencies can occur, and you need to be prepared.

Record the names, phone numbers, street addresses and email address for every vendor that you hire. On the day of your wedding, keep your emergency contact list in your purse and give a copy to your Maid of Honor. The list may come in handy in case your limo driver gets lost, or if you decide you'd like your photographer to take some unplanned shots.

9. Allow extra time for everything on your wedding day and “fake out” your guests with an early start time.

While you may put an exact start time on your invitations, don't expect everyone to take it seriously. Someone is always late.

You need to plan for this by making the time on your invitations at least 15 minutes prior to the time when you actually plan to begin. This is the only way to ensure that you begin on time.

Do the same thing with the other events on your wedding day timeline. Pad the amount of time you think it will take to get your hair done, put on your dress and complete your make up, especially when doing all of this with your bridesmaids. Tell everyone involved when to arrive dressed and ready for photos or when to arrive at the salon with all of the necessary accoutrements. Add some extra time to allow for someone who is running late, which will inevitably happen.

If you are starting photos at 5:00pm, tell them to arrive at the church at 4:40. And whatever you do, don't let anyone know that this is not the "real" start time. If you don't think that 20 minutes is enough leeway, add on another ten and tell them to arrive a half-hour before. Otherwise you may end up wasting time and money because you have to adjust your ceremony and reception to someone else's schedule.

10. Instead of spending time at each table thanking guests at your reception, prioritize your “thank you’s” to allow more time to relax and enjoy your wedding.

The old tradition of visiting tables at the reception to thank each guest is just that: an old tradition. Wedding etiquette handbooks and family members may insist that you do this properly and successfully.

While in theory, this seems like a good idea and it's certainly a nice thing to do, but actually doing it can single handedly ruin your reception.

Look at it this way: let's say you invite 250 people to your wedding and your venue sets up 25 tables each with 10 chairs to comfortably accommodate everyone. If you walk around to each table, allowing only two minutes per table to greet everyone (which breaks down to an implausible 12 seconds per person) it will take 50 minutes to welcome your guests. When you allow for the reality of much longer conversations, that time can easily double.

That's almost two hours of your precious reception time spent on obligation instead of enjoying yourself. Add to this the time necessary for formal events such as the cake cutting, special dances and bouquet toss, and your reception is over in a flash and you haven't even hit the dance floor.

The truth is that you don't have to visit tables at all. But if you do choose to greet your guests individually, here are some tips that will keep this task from dominating your special day.

Use assigned seating and keep track of the tables where your older guests and family members will be seated. These are the people who are most likely to throw a fit if you don't spend individual time with them.

Since the day will be a whirlwind of activity, write down where your relatives and older guests will be seated beforehand.

Make sure you eat dinner as soon as it is served, and then immediately head straight for those tables to make those essential greetings.

As far as your friends are concerned, you can greet them on the dance floor, at the bar or at the after party. Otherwise, you will be visiting tables until the very end of the reception and miss out on all of the fun that comes with it.

Planning a wedding isn't easy; it takes time, effort, and a whole lot of patience. With these ten insider secrets under your belt, your planning will be off to a great start.

Congratulations and good luck with your wedding plans! Please contact me with any questions and to find out if I'm a good match for your wedding day.

Lisa Wallrath

281-630-0453

www.DynamicEntertainment.net

Lisa@DynamicEntertainment.net

Dynamic Entertainment Productions